Messenger app download free for android latest version

If you've just unpacked a new smartphone or are thinking about using this christmas cash envelope to run out and buy, and you want to fill it with new ways to distract, then read on. Among all the other year-end retrospectives, future forecasts and listsicles of services pumped out by every media outlet in the world at this time of year, this story could be for you. There are literally millions of applications. Apple iOS and Google Android offer more than 2 million apps in their download stores. Each app store has its best charts and recommendations to find ordinary suspects — Facebook, Netflix, Spotify, Snapchat, YouTube and other well-known social networks, multimedia services, transportation tools, and games. But there are many other excellent apps out there, from obscure to hard-to-speak, whose names may not be on the tip of your tongue when you fire up your new gadget. Last year, we published a list of seven lesser-known but very valuable apps. We proposed (and still highly recommend) Dark Sky for weather, Stitcher for podcasts, Giphy Cam for creating fun animations and Afterlight for photo editing, among others. The move in this post was completely bonkers, suggesting that guides like this are exactly the kind of things you're looking for now. Here's another one. This time we rounded up eight more useful, fun or otherwise downloadable apps that we came across this year. 1 Second Everyday (iOS and Android)In the smartphone era, almost every moment of our lives has been thoroughly documented, but most of the photos we share move invisibly into the past under the deluge of new posts on Instagram or Facebook. Or in the case of Snapchat, they literally disappear forever. 1 Second Everyday approaches things differently. The app is designed to do exactly what its name suggests: Capture one second of video every day or as many days as you remember to use it. The end result is a sharp burst of short moments that, as they add up, offer a high level but insightful look at what your daily life is like. It may be light in context, but the clip series tells a story that is otherwise difficult to capture in meticulously filtered and deliberately curated photos and videos published elsewhere at once and then immediately forgotten. With 1 Second Everyday, you can export composite video and share it on your social networks of your choice or just keep it to yourself as a kind of personal video log. If nothing else, this is a useful internal reminder that a given year is more than the major milestones of life, holiday photos and cringeworthy news headlines that may come to mind the most; Life consists of many kinds of moments. It's just a matter of which of the we capture and remember. Download 1 Second Everyday here. Hopper (iOS and Android) The last time I wanted to escape the East Coast for california heat, I used called Hopper to help me figure out the best time to fly. Within minutes my flight was booked. While there are many applications for flight observation and travel, few offer a combination of simplicity and data-driven predictive prowess that is so effective. The color-coded layout of the search results calendar gives you a clear, quick view of what days, weeks, and months are the cheapest time to fly. If a particular flight is statistically likely to get cheaper (or more expensive) in the future, Hopper will tell you the chances of various potential price fluctuations and when they are likely. You can also track searches and choose to receive notifications when offers appear or when Hopper finds another place you might be interested in based on previous searches. For example, perhaps your search for a flight to Miami has yielded expensive results, but if a crazy offer for a flight to Ft. Lauderdale or Orlando appears, you will receive a push notification right away. Whether you're planning business trips around specific dates or just trying to scratch this itch wandering on a whim, Hopper is one of the easiest ways to plot the most perfect trip possible. Download Hopper here. The 60db (iOS only) podcasting renaissance is still barreling forward, but it has a long way to go. Only 20% of Americans say they've listened to the podcast. 60db hopes that digital sound consumption will be more similar to radio (a century-old medium that will still be strong), but also injects it with a more personalized, digestible taste of modern digital media services. The result, specifically built by veterans NPR and Netflix, is something that feels like radio, but with something like algorithmic smarts and new content initiatives that have changed the way we define and consume TV now. The 60db allows you to subscribe to most standard, publicly available podcasts that you can come up with, but its main purpose is shorter audio stories that satisfy more specific interests than a public interest podcast. These fast hits, often produced by 60db employees in consultation with established media brands, offer 10 minutes or less of audio stories about an ever-evolving range of topics. And because we can expect services like Pandora and Netflix, 60db learns when you listen — the more you use it, the smarter it is. There's a growing selection of notable podcasting and radio apps like NPR One, Stitcher and RadioPublic (another new offering from public radio vets), but the 60db goes out of its way to be particularly effortless and addictive. Download 60db here. Headspace (iOS and Android) Scientific arguments for careful meditation are beyond well established. And between our growing dependence on apps and screens and the anxiety of an infinitely chaotic news cycle, you can that our brains can enjoy rest now more than ever. Many experts are in favour of completely minimising the time from your phone, you might as well have digital tools to help you restore your mental health. Headspace is popular. The app uses a combination of cutesy design, programmable reminders, and a soothing British accent from a guy named Andy to lure you away from mindless digital distractions and into a concentrated, more reassuring state. Headspace is a (honest warning) paid subscription service that offers guided, audio-based meditation exercises for different circumstances, but offers enough free sessions to give you the right sense of how the service works and whether you should pay $13 a month (or $8 if you're willing to pay a lump sum for a full year of access). There are, of course, several meditation focused apps out there, such as Meditation Studio and Sattva. If you happen to have an Apple Watch, it's also a good idea to check out your own Apple Breathe app. Download Headspace here. (iOS and Android) Even if you're not a big player, it can be hard for you to stop playing this one. PinOut is a retro pinball game from the 80's on iOS and Android. Indeed, the more prone to nostalgia for the 1980s (or otherwise appreciate it might be neon design and synth-heavy music), the longer you'll be glued to it. His retro-electronic soundtrack sounds like it's ripped from intro to Netflix mega-hit Stranger Things, and its pulsating neon game layout reminds you that Tron exploded in pinball form. Download PinOut here. Quartz (iOS and Android) You can easily read news on your phone— whether from friends on Twitter and Facebook, or through more news-specific apps, from aggregators like Google News, Schuan, Feedly and Reddit, to publishers like BuzzFeed, the New York Times or the BBC. But almost never do these apps break out of the traditional, headline-based paradigm of news consumption. Quartz, the news media business brand launched by The Atlantic four years ago, had a different idea. An application launched in early 2016 e-mails a well-known messaging format in favor of a conversational interface. Instead of reading messages, you talk to them. Pre-composed, often full of emoticons app responses (tell me more or further?) allow you to style navigation on the latest and most important events in the world. In an age of clickbait headlines and uncertainty about which articles are even real, what could be more refreshing than talking about news, what feels like a very well-informed friend, even if it's just a soulless bot? Download Quartz here. Nuzzlel (iOS and Android) If you want to follow our strange new reality, but you're not in the mood to talk to a newsbot, Nuzzlel is another virtual kiosk with a modern spin. Social messaging app shows articles most shared by Twitter friends within the last hour—but you can filter it for 24 hours or go back in time to previous days.) What Nuzzlel may be missing in (Flipboard has been offering Twitter powered messages since 2010) makes up for with smart design and flexibility. The app allows you to go beyond the Twitter bubble and see messages shared by friends of friends and browse even more widely in the Discover tab. It also helpfully suggests messages you may have missed. Nuzzlel definitely caters to message junkies first, but that doesn't mean it doesn't serve people willing to do more casual headline skipping. In fact, it's not even just for Twitter users anymore. Last year, the information app redesigned its service to open it up to everyone. In this way, we can watch civilization unravel at the seams as we do everything else: silently staring at our phones together. Download Nuzzlel here. (iOS and Android) Listening to music is one of the most obvious and common applications of our phones and therefore apps like Pandora and Spotify always receive high rankings in app stores. But if you're not in good faith digging boxes of snob music, chances are you're missing out on some of the latest and best music that's being created. That's because before aspiring artists sign a contract with a label or pay to distribute their music to major subscription services themselves, they first take matters into their own hands on services like Bandcamp and SoundCloud. And more than most music services, Bandcamp is able to rightly make a rare claim: It actually helps independent and smaller label artists make money. The service focuses primarily on the sale of physical albums, downloads and other goods such as T-shirts. But even if it's not a streaming service in the traditional sense of the word, Bandcamp allows you to listen to music, follow artists and increasingly discover new music. Just keep an eye out for the best-selling and genre-specific card app is guaranteed to discover something new and delightful. Check out SoundCloud and subscribe to the streaming service at all costs - Apple Music has amazing playlists, and Spotify's data-driven music discovery features are both innovative and immersive. But don't think for a moment that your collection of music libraries is complete until you download the Bandcamp app. It.
